SOCIAL DRAMA · JURY-ROOM THRILLER

The destiny of a young refugee falls in the hands of twelve jury members.

“What would a group of Lebanese people, from different sectarian and political backgrounds, do when they have to take a unified decision? Would they be objective, even for once?”

Boudy Sfeir, director's statement

SYNOPSIS

Post-explosion Lebanon. A fictional judicial reform creates the country's first jury trial. Twelve ordinary citizens, drawn from across Lebanon's sectarian, political, and social divides, are locked in a dilapidated room inside the national electricity company to decide the fate of a Syrian refugee accused of murdering a social activist.

Two witnesses saw the accused fleeing the scene. Death penalty is in effect. One verdict required: unanimous.

One juror votes innocent. Alone against eleven. The others are impatient to leave. What follows is not a debate about evidence. It is an excavation of everything Lebanon has buried.

THE ROOM

Filmed inside a real room at Lebanon's national electricity company, chosen for its symbolic weight. The state of the location mirrors the state of the country: degraded, barely functional, impossible to ignore.

Twelve men decide if one of them belongs. 400 million Arabic speakers recognize the room.

Justice, identity, coexistence. Tnaash turns a jury room into the conversation the Arab world is ready to have.

44% of the population. "Who belongs?" is daily life in the world's fastest-growing cinema market.

#1 MENA

PERFECT STRANGERS

Arabic ensemble drama. 11 Arab countries. Top 5 non-English globally. The format works on platforms.

Every character in the room represents a voice every Arab society holds. The film doesn't preach. It forces twelve men to listen to each other. Viewers leave thinking about their own community. That's not controversy. That's completion rates.

WHO WATCHES

Egypt + Saudi Arabia

The two biggest MENA markets live this film's question daily. In Egypt (113M), 1.5 million Sudanese have arrived since 2023. Who gets to stay, who gets a voice, is a conversation in every Cairo neighbourhood. In Saudi Arabia, 44% of the population are expatriates: 16 million people building a country they may never fully belong to. 9 million Egyptians work across the Gulf. They know what it means to be judged in someone else's room.

Pan-Arab Diaspora

~15M Lebanese, millions more Arab communities worldwide. A film about belonging speaks directly to people navigating identity between two cultures. This audience drives organic discovery and sustains long-tail viewership.

International Arthouse

12 Angry Men is the most remade format in world cinema: Russia, China, Japan, India. Tnaash is the first Arab version, set in a country with no jury system. International viewers enter through genre. They stay for the humanity.

WHY THEY STAY

The genre is built for engagement. Ensemble debate, escalating reveals, no safe resolution. Twelve men representing the full spectrum of a society, learning to sit in a room together. Viewers stay because the answer isn't comfortable, and recommend it because the question matters.

7 awards and a FFLF world premiere give platforms editorial positioning: prestige Arabic content about coexistence that earns press, not just views.

The content gap

Platforms have Arabic comedy, romance, and action. What's missing is prestige Arabic drama that speaks to shared identity across the region. Stories that make audiences feel seen, and make them talk. Tnaash fills that gap.

Boudy Sfeir

Writer-Director

Sfeir has directed across genres (psychological thriller, folk comedy, digital farce), building toward Tnaash, his most formally rigorous work and the film that placed him on the international festival circuit. His previous credits include Shahid/MBC originals and Amazon Prime, making him one of the few Lebanese directors with a track record across theatrical film and major Arabic-language streaming platforms.

CINEMATIC APPROACH

Camera and lighting serve symbolic realism. Sfeir uses snap-zoom to create voyeur proximity: present but uninvited. Fast-rate editing drives sustained tension through ensemble conversation. Sound design layers street noise and military aviation, placing Lebanon's external reality inside the sealed room.
